a. Cuba does not have direct elections for its head of government. Instead, Cuba's legislature, the National Assembly of People's Power, selects the 31-member Council of State, with the president of that body serving as Cuba's head of government and state. On April 19, 2018, Cuba's legislature is scheduled to select a new president for a five-year term; Raúl Castro has said that he will step down as president.
